THE WRECKERS OF ST. AGNES.

There are few parts of England more wild and desolate than the mining districts of Cornwall. Nature as a counterpoise to the treasures which she has lavished on this region of her bounty, has imparted to its features a most forbidding aspect. Bleak and barren plains, unenlivened by vegetation, with neither tree nor shrub to protect the traveller from the wind that sweeps across their surface, and danger in every step, from the innumerable shafts by which they are intersected.

It is truly an inhospitable country—and the nature of the inhabitants seems quite in accordance with its unfriendly characteristics—repulsive and ungainly in appearance, disgusting and ferocious in manner, cruel by nature, and treacherously cunning. Not a step have they gained from the barbarous stage of their savage ancestors. I allude more particularly to the town and district of St. Agnes, near Truro and its people. St. Agnes is a small place, situated on the coast of Cornwall, about ten miles from Truro, across one of those sterile plains; almost covered with the refuse of mines, and perforated in every direction, like a gigantic rabbit warren. The road, so called, through this waste, is little better than a track, which it would be difficult and dangerous to traverse, without a name-less grave, by venturing rashly across these dreary moors.

It was late in the autumn when I visited St. Agnes, and it was towards the close of a gloomy day that I found myself at the residence of Captain Thomas, so I shall call him, whose acquaintance I had made in London, and who succeeded in persuading me, that the only sure way to make a fortune was, by investing a trifle of ready money in a copper mine. He held the rank of captain by the custom of the country, as a mine is conducted like a ship, by a captain and officers. The captain was rather a decent specimen of his caste—for, where all are combinations of the miner, smuggler, wrecker, and consequently ruffian, a man even of decent manners is something. He had one fault, however, which I afterwards discovered—he would have considered it a most meritorious employment to have robbed even his own father, rather than not to have robbed at all.

Our repast being over, and I, like a witless booby, having invested my bank notes in his pouch, in exchange for certain bits of paper he was pleased to call shares—& having received from him, in addition to such valuable considerations, the most flattering congratulations on the prospect of immediate wealth, he proposed an adjournment to the 'Red Dragon,' or red something—I almost forget it is so long since—where he assured me I should meet a most respectable society, and where I might pick up much valuable information. They were all particular friends of his—captains and pursuers of mines.

It was a dismal night. When we sallied out, a thick mist was gathering around—the sea was breaking against the huge rocky cliffs of the adjacent coast, with a deafening roar—and at intervals was heard the distant thunder. It was with no uncomfortable feelings, that I felt myself safely housed at the rendezvous of those choice spirits of the mines.

The party to which I was introduced was seated at a long table, in a spacious apartment, half kitchen, half tap-room—at the upper end of which appeared a blazing fire, beneath a chimney porch of a most ancient and approved formation. On one side of the room, a door opened into a small parlor, and in the corner was a little bar, for the host to dispense to his customers the various potations from his smuggled treasures. For, although it was not trifle of Scheidam or Cognac that would satisfy these congregated worthies, I question whether the king could afford to pay the salaries of the commissioners of excise, if the greater portion of his liege were not more considerate customers than our friends of the Red Dragon.'

The arrival of Captain Thomas was hailed with marked satisfaction. We were soon seated, and in a twinkling a large tumbler of hot brandy and water was placed before me, and pipe thrust into my hand. The conversation, which was rather loud when we entered, was now suddenly hushed, and intelligent glances were quickly interchanged, which I saw related to myself. Thomas understood it, and said, 'You need not be afraid, that gentleman is a particular friend of mine, and a great patron of the mining arts.

I then begged to assure the company of my veneration for mines and mines, and all connected with them. There was a visible brightening up at this declaration, and doubtless at that moment various were the plans of swindling and rascality which shot through the solid brains of that pleasant coterie to put my devotedness to the proof.

'A lonely night this, Captain Thomas,' said a bottle-browed, shock-headed, short, muscular man, whose small dark eyes peered from a brow of peculiar ferocity.

'Uncommonly likely!' returned the other 'and if we should have a bit of luck to-night, it would not be a bad beginning this winter.

'Ah!' said the former, who answered to the name of Knox, 'my wife says she thinks Providence has deserted our coast, we hav'n any god send worth telling about these two years! I've seen the time when we've had the matter of a dozen wrecks in a season.

'Well, never mind, Master Knox,' said an artful looking club rosed fellow named Roberts, who I at first glance took for an attorney, but afterwards found he was a mining agent. From his more constant intercourse with Truro, he was rather better dressed than some of his companions—but his own breeding gave him no other advantage than a conceited saucy air. 'Never mind, Master Knox,' said he, jingling a bunch of seals which peeped from beneath the waistcoat of that worthy, 'you have made most of your luck, and if you don't get any more you won't harm.'

'Why, yes,' said the fellow, drawing out a handsome gold watch, which accorded curiously with his coarse attire. 'I don't complain of the past, and yet I had a narrow escape with this, if it hadn't been for my boy Jem I should have lost it.'

'He's a cute child, that boy of yours,' remarked one.

'There never was a 'cuter. I'll tell you sir, said he, addressing me. 'It's two years ago come December, on a Sunday, when we were all in church, that we had news of a wrack. Well, off we all started you may be sure, and the person not the last to see what it had pleased God to send us. We found on coming up, that it was a French Indiaman. She had gone to pieces off the rocks, and the goods were floating about like dirt. I wasn't long in making the most of it—and Jem was just going off for the cart, when I spied, half covered with weed, and hidden by a piece of rock, the body of a Frenchman. I soon saw I had got a prize for he was loaded with money me and trinkets. These I quickly eased him of, seeing as he'd never want 'em, but to make sure, I hit 'im a good slap over the head, just to see whether the life was in 'um or not. Here one or two of the auditors grinned. Well, I was just going away when I see'd a diamond ring on his finger, and the finger being swelled with the water, I cuts it off, displaying at the same time a knife of rather formidable proportions, and walks off with my goods. I han't gone far when little Jem runs after, crying, 'Dad, dad, hit 'un again, dad! he grin'th, he grin'th! I looked back, and sure enough that rascal, French thief—whether it was drawing the blood or not, I don't know—but he was moving his arm about, and opening his eyes as though he were bent on taking the breath out of my mouth. This put me in a precious rage—those Frenchmen are always a spiteful set, and hate Englishmen as they hate the devil. So I makes no more ado, but I hit 'un a lick with the tail of a rudder lying close by, and I'll warrant me he never come to ask for my goods.

The miscreant chuckled over this horrid recital with all the satisfaction that another might feel at the recollection of a virtuous action, whilst his companions, to whom no doubt the story was familiar, felt no other sensations of uneasiness at a recapitulation than from the recollection that they had not been able to do the same thing. Knox was evidently the ruffian par excellence. I beheld the others around me, the expression of whose countenances would have hung them at any bar in England without any other evidence, yet none ventured to boast of crime: Knox was the only open profession of villany, and seemed to claim his right of pre-eminence: I have been in many parts of the world, and have encountered ruffians of every country and grade—but never before did I have the fortune to hear depravity, and of such a revolting character, so freely confessed, so unblushingly avowed.

Well Knox, said Thomas after a short pause -so you have seen Hibbert Shea. How's poor Bill Trecaddick!

Knox placed his finger significantly on his cheek.

How! said the other, dead!

Dead as mackerel, returned Knox, you know I was in it, and a sharp brush we had. Poor Bill had three balls in him: he died the same night.' A universal expression of sympathy followed his announcement, and various were the questions but by different individuals as to the details of his death. It appeared that he was killed in an engagement with a revenue cruiser.

'But was he likely a [illegible] when you left?' said Thomas, 'where did you bury him?

Alongside of the gauger, I s'pose, said Roberts, who ventured a sidelong glance of malicious meaning, thought apparently half doubtful of this consequence. I never saw so speedy a change in any human being as that remark produced in Knox. In an instant his brow became as black as the storm which now raged with appalling violence from without.

What hast thou to do with that, thou next meddling coxcomb! said he his black eyes, almost concealed by their overhanging brows, on the subject of his wrath.—'Now mark me, Master Roberts, play off no more of thy jokes on me. This is not the first time I have warned thee but it shall be the last.

I learned afterwards that the gauger alluded to was Knox a half brother' who was supposed to have met with his death by the hands of his resolution, and his body flung down a shaft near the sea, now known by the name of Gauger's Shaft, What confirmed the suspicious was, that he was known to have frightful dreams about his murdered brother and some said he was known to to tremble like a child, if left alone at night. Be that as it might however, a ferocious altercation was proceeding between Knox and a friend of Roberts, who had replied to the other's threats, which appeared likely to proceed to serious consequences, had not the attention of all parties been diverted by a loud and continued knocking at the outer door. This seemed so unusual an occurrence that the host hesitated to unbar, for never was a stranger known to arrive at St. Agnes at such an hour and on such a night too. for we heard the rain descend in torrents, and the thunder howling at intervals.

The knocking continued vehemently, and although we were to many to fear any thing like personal danger, yet I could see an evident though undefinable fear spreading throughout the party, sufficiently expressed by their anxious glances. In no one was such an expression more visible than in Knox. It was the result of some superstitious feeling, which the conversation of the night, and the awful storm now raging about them, had called into play.

The knocking was now fiercer than ever and the host was at last constrained to undo bolt and unbar, the guest whoever he was, would take no denial. As the door opened in stalked a tall weatherbeaten man, enveloped in a huge shaggy great coat and a broad oil skin hat on his head.

'What the devil dost thee mean by this!' he said dashing his hat upon the floor, and shaking the rain from his coat like a huge water dog,— keeping a traveller outside your gates on such a night! At this moment, during a lull in the storm, we heard a heavy booming sound from the sea.

'A wrack! a wrack!' shouted Knox, and instantly a dozen fellows were on their legs ready to rush forth like thirsty blood hounds on their prey. 'Keep your places you fools!' cried the stranger, 'if she goes ashore, it will be many miles from here, with the wind in this quarter.' They all seemed to acknowledge the justice of the remark, by sullenly resuming their places. 'I've heard the guns some time,' continued the stranger, 'but she has good offing yet, and she may manage to keep off. I'd lay my life its a foreign craft, they are always in such a plaguy hurry to sing out.' The company had leisure by this time to seat themselves and resume their pipes. They likewise, seeing he was no ghost, took the liberty of scanning their guest. He was not very remarkable further than being a tall muscular man with short curling black hair, immense bushy whiskers, meeting under his chin, and large black eyes. Altogether, it was not an unpleasant countenance.—He did not apologise for his intrusion, but called at once for his pipe and his glass.

Did you come from the Truro side? asked Knox. The stranger took a huge whiff and nodded assent.

Who might have brought you across the moors?'

'Dost thou think no one can tread the moor but thyself and the louts of St. Agnes?'

'None that I ever heard of except Beelzebub, said Knox, peering from beneath his brows suspiciously on the new comer.

The stranger laughed.

'The path is dangerous by night,' said Thomas, 'few strangers find the way alone.

'Then I am one of the few, for here I am' said he.

'I've live here man and boys these forty years,' said Knox' 'and I never knew a straingdr to do that before. And thou' must be a straiager, for I've never seen thee.

Art thou sure of that? Knox again scanned him attedtively.

'I ever saw thee before!

'You see then a stranger can find his way in these parts. I came by the gauger's shaft. Thou know'st the gauger's shaft' said he significancy.

'Hell! said the other furiously. Dost thou come here to mock me!!! thou dost had'st better retora afore harm comes to thee.

Thou'rt a strong man, said his opponent, but I'm so much a stronger, that I would hold thee with one arm on yonder fire till thou wert as black as thine own black heart. Come thou need'st not frown on me man, if thou hast a spark of courage I'll put it now to the test.

'Courage! I fear neither thee nor Beelzebub!

I'll wager this heavy purse French louis d'ors against that watch and ring which befits thy finger so oddly, that thou dares't not go into yonder room alone, and look on the face that meet thee here.

Thou'rt a juggler and a cheat—I'll nothing further to say to thee.

There's my gold, said he, throwing a heavy purse on the table, look at it' comes, a hundred as bright louis as ever were coined in France, against thy watch and ring, not worth the half.—the eyes of the wrecker glistened at the bright heap of gold. What is the wager!' he demanded.

'if thou durst go into yonder room, there I will raise the form of one whom thou wouldst most dread to see.

'I fear nothing and believe thee to be a cheat.

'There's my gold.

'take the wager' cried several of Knox's friends. we'll see thou hast the gold.

'Done' cried Knox, with a look of desperate resolve, which the cheers of his friends and the sight of the gold helped him to assume, and he placed the ring and watch on the heap of louis.

'I must have arms and lights.

'Take them, said the stranger 'but before you go, I will show you how to discover the look up the room and touching the inside with the point of a pin, a small aperture flew open, and disclosed a small plate filled without lead. At that moment it was discovered that the stranger had lost the little finger of his left hand. For a moment all was as silent as the grave. A frightful feeling seemed to pervade the breast of every one around It was thought the murdered stood before, them to claim his own! The stranger broke into a loud laugh. What the devil ails you all? Are you afraid of a man without a finger! and his laughter was louder than before.

I will not go into the room, said Knox in a low broken voice,

Then the watch and ring are mine, said the stranger. You have forfeited the wager and he began to fill the bag with the coin.

It's a base juggle to rob me of my property, cried Knox, whose courage returned as he witnessed the unghost like manner in which the stranger fingered the money.

Keep your wager, man,' cried Thomas 'well see you rightly dealt with.—He can no more do what he says than raise the prince of darkness himself.

Will you stand to your bargain? asked the stranger

I will, and defy the devil and all his works., He took a candle and loaded pistol, and went towards the room. If ever the agony of a life were condensed into the short space of few minutes, that was the time. Ruffian as she was, he was a pitiable object. Pale and trembling, without making an effort conceal his distress, he paused and turned irresolute even at the threshold of the door. Shame and avarice urged him on. He entered the room and closed the door.

If I say that I looked on as a calm spectator of these proceedings, I should say falsely. I began to grow nervous; and was infected with the superstitious feeling which had evidently taken possession of my companions. The only unconcerned person was the stranger, at least he was apparently so. He very coolly tied up the money, watch, and ring the bag, and placed them on the table. He then took up two pieces of paper and wrote some characters on both, one he handed to Thomas, it was marked with the name of the guager, the other he kept himself, He advanced to the fire, which was blazing brightly, and muttering a few words threw into it a small leaden packet, and retired at the same moment to the end of the room. The flames had hardly time to melt the thin sheet lead ere our ears were greeted with the most terrific and appaling explosion that I have ever in my life heard, and as thought the elements were in unison, a deafining thunder crash shook the house to its foundation Every man was thrown violently to the ground, the chairs tumbled about as though imbued with life, every door was burst open by the shock and hardly a pane of glass remained entire. This, with the screams of the woman and the groans of the men, if any one could withstand, without actual terror taking possession of his heart he must be a bolder man than I was. For several minutes (for so it appeared to me did we lie on the floor in this state, expecting, momentarily, the house to fall over us in ruins. All was however, silent as death except the pealing of the thunder and the roaring of the storm, so that when the sense of suffocation was somewhat removed, by the fresh air forcing through open doors, and windows, we ventured to hail each other.

It was sometime, however, before we could get a light, and that complished, our first care was to look to our friend in the back parlor. We found him lying on his face, quite insensible and bleeding from a wound in his head which he must have received in falling. We brought him into the large room, and after a time when people could be brought to their senses, we procured restoratives. I never shall forget the wild gastly look with which he first gazed around him. He looked around as though seeking some horrid object. 'It's gone, he cried, 'thank God!—what horrid sight! who saw it. 'Saw what? who! asked Thomas, Just as bloody and ghastly, as when I pitched him down the shaft, cried he incoherently.

Hush! hush! said Thomas, 'collect yourself—you don't know what you are taking of.

Who says I murdered him? cried the miserable being before us. 'Who says I got his money? He's a liar, I say—a liar, His money sunk with him. Let 'em hang me—I am innocent. They cannot prove it. It became too distressing. Fortunately for the feelings of all, the unhappy man, or rather maniac, relapsed into insensibility, and in that state was conveyed home.

It was not till then that we thought of the stranger. No trace of him could be found. The money, ring and watch had disappeared.

Strange were the rumors abroad the next day at St. Agnes. Some men going very early to work, averred they saw a horseman flying over the moor, crossing shafts and pits, without once staying to pick his way. It could have been no human horseman, nor steed, that could have sped on such a wild career. There was another report which accounted for the appearance and disappearance of the stranger in another way. Some smugglers reported, that on that night they saw a beautiful French smuggling lugger sheltering from the gale in a little frequented bay along the coast. It might have been one of the crew, who had made himself acquainted with the circumstances he mentioned and which was no secret, and made his bold dash for a prize, but this version of the story was scouted as quite unworthy of the slightest credit. The former was the most popular belief.

WASHINGTON CITY.

SATURDAY JULY 29, 1843,

THE ELECTION—HON. J. B. DAWSON.

We are much pleased to hear that this gentleman is returned to the next Congress, and trust he may be accompanied to Washington by his amiable family as usual.

It is not rare to meet with pleasant families from the South, but a more pleasant, and agreeable one, seldom falls in our way, and we are gratified to hear this amiable man is beloved by all partys.

HON. G. W. SUMMERS, that indefatigable reformer, who happily yields to no one in uprightness and patriotism—is likewise of the next Congress. We are pleased that he changed his mind, such men is much needed. For so young a man he is held in high estimation by all parties in the house.

HON. D. LEVI, DELIGATE from Florida, is another gentleman who will be present the next Congress. There are few men whom we would rather greet than this warm hearted young man, and we long to see him with many other dear friends. As to his political opinions it is none of our business, he is master of his own mind and so may it ever be! Every man's opinion is a sacred trust—it is the gift of heaven for which he is accountable to no man. His actions alone are subject to scrutiny.

As for the other new members of the 28 Congress, we have not the honor of knowing them with the exception of our old friends from Virginia who were in the last Congress.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

What has become of the resolutions passed by the ARMY and NAVY Convention of pious officers, to reform men in the service? We are anxious to see them. What is the matter? Are they afraid to let them see the light,?

Come gentlemen do not keep your "light under a bushel." If you are afraid to let your acts meet the public eye, and it appears as though it were so, it shows you fear man, more than God.

If the people cannot see through this, the consequence will be apt to open their eyes, we trust our friends in New York some of them at least, will have the goodness to forward the Resolutions to us, as soon as they are published if ever.

We have had a hint that this (added to some other) arrogent transactions have had some influence upon the recent elections. The PEOPLE supposing those 'pious reformers are mostly WHIGS and that they will be countenanced by Whigs in bringing about a UNION of CHURCH and STATE—have taken the other side. We should not be surprised if it were true. There are many eyes upon them.

This would be "a hopeful convertion" indeed, to get possession of the army and navy. They must think the people of the U. S. a parcel of Idiots to place the sword in the hands of the church, the most inhuman, of all human BUCHERS.

But they say they only want to "reform the army and navy—to convert them from wickedness to christianity" why do they not convert the gangs of ROBBERS MURDERERS INCENDIARIES counterfiters and prevent seduction and other crimes unfit, to name perpetrated daily and hourly in every part of the country the papers are filled with details of crime. One Editor declares that Beelzebub himself must have "possession of the country," if he be not, many of his imps are, these are their converts we have just read eight brutal murders; is this the religion they wish to teach the men in the service? It is the RESULT of their teachings through town and country. They have 'spread the gospel as they call it, at every house, and hovel, in the U. S. see the fruit.

Here are a few of their "hopefully converted" sinners."

"A Banditti.—The Boston Times learns that there exists in the vicinity of Albany, in the Patroon's woods, on the Shaker road, a regularly organized band of miscreants, who are linked together in a secret society by the most fearful and binding oaths. The daytime is passed by these ruffians in playing cards, dicing, drinking and with lewd female associates, nor do they emerge from their covert until long after nightfall, and they sally forth to rob the unprotected traveller and thus procure to maintain the onerous expense of their shameless and debauched existence. The police, it appears, are afraid to interfere, well knowing they would be met by an armed and sanguinary resistance.—Balt. Sun.

This is the way the hypocrites have converted the whole union. In the very hot bed of their pious tracts, and bible societies is this Albany, and in fact the whole of N. Y. State and city swarms with them like bees, and are eminently distinguished for brutality of conduct and swindling the poor and ignorant, we know them well.

They have the impudence of old satan himself to propose to the government, and to Congress, to let them go into the army and navy to "spread" such gospel as this no wonder when the people give them millions of Dollars and receive nothing in return but crime and ignorance.

BISHOP McELVAIN AND THE CONVENTION.

The Bishop knows all about the treason hatched at West Point under a christian cloak. They could not go on without the Presence of his Reverence. He must take a great interest in the pious convention, to come all the way from Ohio to aid his pupils. A precious case he is for a Bishop. 'Wonder if he feels no compunction for permiting the McKays to open sutler shops at West Point when he was chaplain there holding a professor ship in the institution at the same time!

These McKays made handsome fortunes by selling liquors of all kinds to the cadets with various luxuries and articles of dress at from one to three hundred per cent as we were informed by an assistant. Be that as it may the whole concern left West Point shortly after we published the infamous transactions of those "pious" McKays. They sold millions of tracts besides to the poor over-awed cadets says "the Lords cause was suffering."

Col. Thayer and Mr Cozzens however left the place previous to this. they were forced to give up, submit, In short for tyranny, VENALITY bigotry and licencious ness there is hardly a parallel for WEST Point at the time of which we speak.

NEW PAPER.

The whole country round is in a buzz of rejoicing (it is well something can make them Glad) that Hon. M. M. Noah is going into the chair editorial, once more and the best of it is that he is taking the side of his country where every good man ought to be found. Let parties take care of themselves, the robber who stalks from his hiding place when darkness shrouds the earth—the Banditti—and the death dealing Pirate, have not done more injury to this country than party—spirit and partizen acts! Both are alike hostile to the people.

We shall now have something good as no man knows better than Maj. N. how to expose fraud, and corruption, or to defend the rights of the people.

We have few writers who can cope with him, and none who possesses more tolerance, humor, or goodness of heart.

May the Weekly Messenger ever be the bearer of GOOD news.

THE HUNTRESS.

Compelled to send of the letter composing the form, of this week's paper in time to receive the New type for the next Huntress we have had to run the tale, (The wreckers) over upon the 2d page as the boys through mistake had set up nearly the whole of it.

OFF AGAIN.

'No calculating upon these big folks of "ourn" here to day and off to-morrow.

Our heart had just began to flutter with joy—and our friend of all work, was just giving the last tuck to the hole in our cap and pining the ribbon securely over it—to pay the promised visit to our FRIENDS when Lo! Word came that the President had gone South, and the Cabinet—north, and our friend Jonney North "and by East Ah! These are the times to try womens souls, and bodies, too, especially those who have been cheated out of their rights through the treachery of pious WHIG, and Benton Senators the vengence of heaven will overtake them sooner or later!

We hope however the President has left us some "broken wittles "since we happen to be one of his "poor kin."*

Meantime our friends who are at home and have always stepped between us and the storm, will please raise a trifle to purchase a few SORTS for our small letter, and then with our new Editorial, how we will shine!

THE GLOBE AND OURSELF IN TROUBLE.

The Globe is loosing its friends. so are we. The Boston Post and others have deserted the globe.

We are in trouble about our R: Star. The last but one come safe to hand, and was tumbled out upon the floor with the other mails we took it up—kissed and laid it down again without opening it, and have never seen it since! some thief stole it no doubt the last never came!

PROPOSALS

For publishing in the City of Raleigh, North Carolina, a weekly Newspaper, to be entitled

THOS. LORING, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

I propose to publish a paper under the above title, believing the public mind requires a Newspaper parties, and devoted to Literature, News, Agriculture, Miscellany, General Politics, &c. independent of party bias. I am encouraged to this undertaking by many of my late associates, as well as by many who have been opposed to me. A large portion of the community have become tired of the matter and the manner of party strife, and require a Newspaper of which they can tell rely for impartial and unprejudiced statements of facts, and for matter of general interest with the expectation that moderation and calmness of temper shall be the distinguishing features that mark the composition of the Editor and the Communications of his correspondents

The public will have an opportunity of testing its claims to patronage, by a very cheap process. I feel confident of giving satisfaction to all its subscribers.

I shall publish puplic documents connected with the history of the State and of the Union, so far as the limits of the Independent will permit—espicially the messages, of the Presidents of the United States, the Messages of the Governors of North Carolinia, with abstracts from other public documents, and Legislative and Congressional Proceedings. In giding a record of the movements of political parties, I shall endeavor to state the facts, without partially or comment. Of public men, of all parties, it is my design to speak with respect; and when justice and the puplic good requires that Demagogues attached to either, should be reprovedit shall be done with candor and good temper.

The independent will be printed on a sheet a little smaller than the North Carolinia Standard, once a week, at the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance.

If any person who pays $2 in advance, becomes dissatisfied at the end of 6 months one dollar shall be returned to him, provided it can be done without taxing the Editor with postage. Or, any one is at liberty to subscribe for six months only and pay one dollar.

NOTICE.

THE subscriber has taken the City Lunch corner of 14th street and Pennsylvania avenue formerly kept by John Handy jr. where he intneds keeping all the desicacies of the season both in the eating and drinking way. Gentlemen will please call and taste for themselve

MISSOURI CURRENRIVER COPPER MINES.

SHANNON COUNTY, MISSOURI.

WOULD now ask the attention of capitalist to these Copper Mines, rice in are, yielding from 40 to 66 per cent, of copper, which, by at single process of smelting, is equal to the South American refined pig—so pronounced by Messrs McKim & Co., of Baltimore, to whom several shipments were made by the "Mine a la Motte Mining Company." Situated near the junction of Jack's Fork and the Current river, within all a mile of either stream and near waterpower for all manufacturing purposes, and under a sunny clime in the vicinity of agricultural lands equal to the best in Missouri: surrounded by hills bearing inexaustible forests, and rising to mountains whence flow pure and never failing springs forming navigation six months in the year,—Nature with a profuse ends seems to have omitted but few facilities for manufacturing and transporting the product of the copper mines. Believing this property of all the vast and fertile Mississippi valley may be made the most safe and profitable investment of capital, will propose a disposition ofm portion (by sale or otherwise,) on lib- of terms. by which to enlist the agency ala pitalist, and make it productive.

caMiners may obtain mining lots, by opplication to S. Chilton at the mines.

P. S. The above described mines, since the year 1837, have been held, in a measure, unproductive by conflicting claims, I first located confirmed Spanish grants on them, which James Whitcomb, then Commissioner, decided were not confirmed. I then acquired title under Mr. James Thom son who held on by floating pre-emption right said company, both of whom base villains are convicted by tes facts of bribery and perjury on which alone was set at naught by Whitcomb who was successful in the change of Commissioners an investigation was had and my title confirmed. See report of Conel T. J. Allen register of the land office and the decision of the General land Office as published in the Globe November 7th 1842 also decision of the Hon. NEW GUIDE TO WASHINGTON.

By G. Watterston, Esq—The above work just published, with a frontispiece of the States of Washington by Greenough, and contains every thing relating to the history of Washington, and its progress and improvement since its origin to be citizen and stranger, and is a perfect guide to all its object of curiosity, and to every thing that a stranger would be desirous to make himself acquainted with, while a sojourner in it, or a resident abroad. Gives a true picture of Washington, though not a mere picture book—half its institutions, works of art, &c., are briefly but satisfactorily described. It sketches its usages customs, manners, and religious and moral tone of its society—public buildings, literary, social, and other institutions—its location, the condition of the legal and medical professions, its growth and character of its resident population—gives an abstract of its municipal regulations, civil and criminal courts—duties of the principal executive officers of the General Government, of the committees of Congress, and a great variety of useful, local, and general information which a resident as well as a stranger would be pleased to possess. Among the descriptions of the societies which have been organized in Washington, are two at considerable length, and of great interest—one, of the National Institution, and the other of the Society of Odd Fellows.

The work is printed in a neat and handsome style, of over 200 pages, and for sale at the book-store of R. FARNHAM, corner of 11th street and Pennsylvania avenue.

SHERWOOD FOR CHRONIC DISEASES

Of the class of Hypertrophy, including the forms of Scrofula, viz: Tubercula Consumption, Dyspepsia, Chronic Disease of the Liver, of the Heart of the Spleen, of the Kidneys, of the Spine, White Swellings, Scrofulous Sore Eyes, Scald Head, King's Evil, Leucorrhœa, Chlorosis, Menorrhagia or Females complaints.

These are but different modifications of the same disease, arising from the same cause, distinguished by the same diagnosis, and curable by the same remedies. Their common cause is an irregular action of the Electro-Galvanic forces in the system—they may all be detected by pressure upon the sides of the vertebra and glands of the neck which effects the Electro-magnetic remedies: The latter are accompanied by a compendious medical treatise, explaining the principles of the discovery upon which they are founded, stating the manner in which they are to be applied. In this work Dr. Sherwood demonstrates the fact that every part of the human body, together with every particle of animate and inanimate matter either in a negative or positive state of electro and that every motion, in all matter, whether in the largest masses or in the smallest particles, is produced by the attracting and repelling force of this universal principle. The morbid action which produces disease of the organs or limbs seems to be occasioned by the undue preponderance of one of these forces in the system and his remedies restore health by subduing this irregular action to an equilibrium. By this means the very seeds of the disease are eradicated, and a permanent cure effected, even cases where all hope of relief from other sources is abandoned. The Electro-Magnetic remedies are the only preparations applicable to this prevailing class of diseases and they never disappoint the confidence reposed in them, they symptoms of the class of diseases to which thee are applicable can be discovered, under the directions contained in the work which accompanies it, without the aid of a physician, and can be used with perfect safety and success without dieting or in convenience.
